Ms. Deela explained that the examination requires paying an annual fee and completion of certification continuation points in order to maintain the certification. In addition, the exam has an expiration date if the annual payment is not made. Although the exam is more affordable initially, it presents higher long term fees, risks higher fail rates from dental assistants and creates a financial barrier in order for the public and dentists to verify that the dental assistant meets state qualifications. As a result, Ms. Deela urged the Board to reconsider its decision of accepting AMT as an option for licensure until it has undergone further evaluation and proven to meet or exceed the standards that have been expressed by the dental community.
